SECTION A

This section is compulsory

Item 1.

The discovery of oil in the Middle East transformed the region into a major centre of Global energy markets and linked it closely to international relations and Western economic security. Growing dependence on Persian Gulf crude oil changed Western foreign policy towards securing access to oil and protecting supply routes. This created close political and economic relations while contributing to regional instability between 1973 and 2003, including the oil embargoes, the Iranian Revolution and the Gulf Wars. Oil became an important factor in shaping diplomacy, international security and economic development in the Middle East.

The discovery of oil in Uganda has placed the country on the international stage through major petroleum projects that are reshaping the national energy sector. Pressure to join the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries in order to secure oil markets and promote economic growth has increased the development of the 1,443 kilometers East African Crude Oil Pipeline from the Albertine region to the port of Tanga in Tanzania. These developments have created tensions between Uganda, neighbouring countries and international buyers. The Petroleum Authority of Uganda is seeking ways to ensure that the country benefits from its oil resources while reducing these challenges using lessons from oil development in the Middle East.

Task:

(a) Evaluate the impact of oil discovery on the transformation of the Middle East described in the scenario.

(b) Propose strategies that the Petroleum Authority of Uganda should adopt to address the challenges in the scenario.

SECTION B

Respond to one item from this section

Item 2.

During the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, France experienced political instability following the French Revolution. The unrest created an opportunity for Napoleon Bonaparte to rise to power. He became popular because of his military victories, strong leadership, efficient administration and efforts to restore order. After becoming ruler, Napoleon introduced several reforms, including the Napoleonic Code, a centralised system of government, promotion based on merit and economic measures that strengthened France. However, his desire to expand French influence across Europe led to wars with other European states. These countries formed alliances against him and eventually defeated him in 1815.

In Bule District, people disagree about how leaders make decisions in public offices. Some residents say power remains in the hands of a small group of leaders. Others say jobs are given unfairly and public services do not reach everyone equally. These problems have created tension in the community. The Local Government Leaders Association has organised a workshop for local leaders to promote good leadership and fair governance. You have been invited to present an essay showing how lessons from Napoleon's rule in France between 1799 and 1815 can help leaders in Bule District address these leadership challenges.

Task:

(a) Analyse the impact of Napoleon's rule on France described in the scenario.

(b) Suggest lessons that leaders in Bule District should adopt to address the challenges in the scenario.

Item 3.

During the early twentieth century, the Balkan region in South Eastern Europe experienced rising political tension. This resulted from growing nationalist movements, the weakening of the Ottoman Empire and rivalry among European powers. Between 1908 and 1913, events such as the Bosnian Annexation and the Balkan Wars increased conflict among states like Serbia, Austria Hungary and Bulgaria. These developments reduced regional stability and strengthened military alliances, increasing tensions among the major European powers. The situation also encouraged stronger nationalist feelings among Balkan peoples who demanded self-determination and independence.

In Njara Town, youth groups have started forming organisations based on strong ethnic and regional identity. Some members believe that strong group identity promotes unity and protects local interests. Others fear that these divisions may create mistrust among people and weaken cooperation in public projects. These concerns have created debate within the town. The Town Council has called residents to share ideas on how to promote peace and unity. You have been asked by your area chairperson to present how nationalism and regional rivalry can strengthen unity or create instability if they are poorly managed, using lessons from the Balkan Crisis.

Task:

(a) Examine the impact of the Balkan Crisis on Europe as described in the scenario.
(b) Evaluate the lessons from the Balkan Crisis to address the divisions described in the scenario.
