History 2

1. The A-Level P.2 paper comes with two sections (A, B) and 3 numbers based on constructs.

- Section A comes from construct 4 called Global Affairs (from Ideologies - South East Asia)

It has one number, and it is compulsory

- Section B comes from construct 3 called Revolutions and their impact in the world

It has 2 numbers, and you pick one (1)

- Each Qn has part a & b

Therefore, a candidate has to attempt 2 Qns, picking the compulsory from (A) and one from Section (B). These are done in 2 hrs.

2. There are 4 bases of assessment

- IDENTIFICATION / INTRODUCTION
- THINKING
- ANALYSIS
- COHERENCE

I	Identification
T	Thinking
A	Analysis
C	Coherence

3. Each basis has 4 levels of achievements

- Level 3

- Level 2
- Level 1
- Level 0

In Your Essay, the following parts must be there!

1. (Introduction/Identification)

G1 - Global Identification / Introduction (No. 1)

R1 - Revolutions Identification (No. 2/3)

GI/R1 ③

- Identifies and clearly states the challenge in the scenario
- Provides a detailed and accurate historical background showing diverse knowledge about the topic
- Links/ connects the historical background to the body.

②

- Identifies and unclearly states the challenge in the scenario
- Provides a brief background about the topic

①

- Identifies and unclearly states the challenge in the scenario

or

- Provides a brief historical background about the topic

G1, R1 must therefore have three parts, namely;

1. Historical problem — HP
2. Historical Background — HB
3. Historical Linkage — HL (HP, HB and HL being the respective codes)

⓪

- Irrelevant / No challenge or problem Identified / No Introduction.

2. (Body)

A. (Thinking)

GT- Global Thinking (G.T. No.1)

Revolutions Thinking (RT. 2/3)

3. Body of the essay paragraphs (06) — (08), each with HK, HT and HA.

- Historical Knowledge — Point statement
- Historical Thinking — Explanations & examples
- Historical Application — Connectivity
  — Outcome
  — Point related
  — Application

③ (13 - 18)

- Identifies and mentions the topic.
- Explains those Ideas in depth, logically with multiple examples
- Explains the outcomes of those Ideas.

② (09 - 12)

- Identifies and mentions Ideas about the topic.
- Explains those Ideas in depth, logically with a few examples
- Gives outcomes of those Ideas

① (04 - 08)

- Identifies and explains Ideas about the topic
- Explains those Ideas unclearly with or without examples.

⓪ (00 - 03)

- Merely mentions/outlines Ideas

5. Analysis/Application/Evaluation

This is part B, coded by GA / RA (points expected are 6 - 8)

Each must have HK, HT, HA

Analysis ③ (13 - 18)

- Identifies and mentions ideas for application or analysis or evaluation about the topic.
- Explains those Ideas in depth, logically, with multiple specific examples.
- Explains the outcomes of those Ideas.

② (09 - 12)

- Identifies and mentions Ideas for application analysis/evaluation about the topic
- Explains those Ideas in depth, logically with a few examples.
- Outcomes of those Ideas

① (04 - 08)

- Identifies and mentions Ideas for application or analysis or evaluation
- Explains those Ideas unclearly with a few or no examples.

⓪ (00 - 03)

- Merely mentions/outlines Ideas.

5. Conclusion

Historical Conclusion (H.C. being the code)

Conclusion must be with evidence. It is scored under Historical Linkage (HL)

6. Coherence, covering the codes (G.C and R.C)

How good is your whole essay?

Coherence ③ (13 - 18)

- The structure of the essay is well organised with Introduction, body and conclusion flowing neatly
- Gives a clear, well-reasoned and relevant conclusion with practical, evidence-based recommendations.

- Clear Sequential and logical flow of work
- clear smooth transition of Ideas (using suitable transition words)

②

- The structure of the essay is organised with Introduction, body and conclusion flowing neatly.
- Gives a conclusion with minimal connection abt the relevant aspects.
- Some sequential and logical flow of work
- Smooth transition of most Ideas. (using suitable transition words)

①

- The structure of the essay is poorly organised missing either Introduction or conclusion
- Gives a simple conclusion without reference to the relevant aspects.
- Work lacks sequence and Logical flow
- No transition Ideas

The relevance of the revolutions in Europe (1789-1848) in addressing the challenges in the African state of Chamata, especially internal uprisings by her people against the existing autocratic leaders in order to solve them.

HB

Between 1789 and 1848, Europe experienced several revolutions which were in most cases violent and were aimed at bringing about fundamental political, social and economic changes in many European states. The era of revolutions in Europe started with the 1789 French Revolution. This was an uprising in France staged by the common people against the ancient regime under King Louis XVI and the privileged classes. The revolutionary masses overthrew the French government and established fundamental political, social and economic reforms including the creation of the French republic by 1792. The French revolution of 1789 had great consequences on Europe including arousing the nationalistic and liberal sentiments of many European peoples leading to other revolutions, especially in the following 19th century. These subsequent revolutions included the 1820s, 1830 and 1848 revolutions which occurred in many European states including the Austrian Empire, Prussia, Italian and Germany states, Belgium, Poland, Greece and in France again.

HL

The revolutions which took place in Europe starting from 1789 to 1848 were caused by long-term and immediate general factors which included the following:

Body:

The rise and spread of European nationalism was a major cause of the revolutions in Europe between 1789 and 1848. Nationalism, which is the strong feeling of love and attachment to one's national identity, is always given as what inspired many Europeans to revolt. By 1789, the French felt that their country was not governed properly, and the French masses were suffering because of the injustices and exploitations of the Ancien Régime, especially feudalism, the tax burden, social classism, and the lettre de cachet among others. Due to the strong feeling of nationalism, the Frenchmen rose against the Ancien Régime in order to liberate their country, and indeed they succeeded, because many of these situations changed. In many European states by 1848, it was always the strong feeling of nationalism that inspired the European masses to rise up, especially against foreign rule. For example, the Italians rose up in 1848 against Austrian dominance in order to have national self-autonomy and unity. This feeling of nationalism was therefore a strong factor which aroused the European masses during all that time (1789 - 1848) seeking liberty, equality and national independence.

In conclusion, therefore, the revolutions occurred in Europe during the years 1789 to 1848 because of several political, social and economic factors which were long-term, short-term and immediate. These included the rise of nationalism, financial crisis, poor harvests, among others and these revolutions affected European society in many ways.

The relevance of the 1789 French Revolution on the people of Moka solving their problem of a government that is not pro-people as they seek to own their country.

The 1789 French Revolution was an uprising that took place in France from 1789 to 1799 where the common people rose up against the monarchial government of France under King Louis XVI and overthrew it. They instituted fundamental social, political and economic changes including the establishment pf a republic by 1792. The revolution was a great event that closed the 18th century and opened the 19th century creating very outstanding effects in France, Europe and the whole world which effects are of relevance to the modern society.

The 1789 French Revolution had both positive and negative effects in France, Europe and the world at large which to a larger extent were positive as discussed.

1. The French Revolution of 1789 led to the abolition of Feudalism in France which later led to abolitions of Feudalism in many European states and other parts of the world. Feudalism which was an exploitative land ownership system where the French and European society was divided between Feudal land owners including kings and royal families, the church, Nobles and some middle classmen and the landless peasants made the Frenchmen and other Europeans suffer due to feudal exploitations. When the French revolution broke out in 1789, the Frenchmen through the formed National Assembly abolished the Feudal Systems in France with other Ancient systems on 4th August, also known as the night of stupid Dukes. With such abolitions, all Feudal exploitations and injustices ended in France and land was nationalized and distributed to the French peasants Including the church land which was nationalized through the Civil Constitution of the clergy of July 1790. Resultantly this successful Feudal abolition in France was copied and adopted by many other European nations leading to the end of Feudalism in Europe and the world.

2. The 1789 French Revolution also led to the spread of the Ideas of enlightenment in France and from France to other parts of Europe and the world. The Ideas of Enlightenment included liberalism, Equality, Fraternity and nationalism. These Ideas which represented the Interests and plight of the common man were propagated by the French Great thinkers of the 18th Century, For example Jean Jacques Rousseau, who mentioned it that "man is born free but always lives in chains" and called upon the Frenchmen to unleash these chains. These Ideas Inspired the Frenchmen to revolt and establish fundamental change from 1789. They also decided to export these Ideas to the rest of Europe through the 1792 edict of Fraternity. The French revolutionary armies led by Napoleon Bonaparte and other French generals also exported these Ideas to other European states during the revolutionary wars for example, in Italian, and Germany states. By the end of the 19th century these Ideas of enlightenment had reached to many corners of the world inspiring people to liberate themselves they were included in the National mottos of many countries for example the Caribbean Haiti.

3. The 1789 French revolution led to the abolition of the French monarchy which was copied by some many countries and they carried out similar abolitions. The Bourbon monarchy under King Louis XVI which had ruled France for over 500 years and was a despotic and autocratic monarchy was abolished in France by September 1792. The abolition was sealed with the execution of the French King on 21st January 1793. France was later declared a republic with a republican constitution. The French republic was consolidated up to the 19th century giving many European people who were suffering due to despotic monarchies to abolish them and they went republican. Such Nations Includes Turkey that abolished its Ottoman Empire by 1923, Germany that decided to go republican by 1919 plus so many other countries in the world.

4. The French revolution of 1789 led to the rise and spread of modern nationalism in France, into Europe and the rest of the world. The Frenchmen in 1789 rose up revolutionary because they believed that their country was poorly governed and wanted to liberate themselves. They were Inspired to do so because of the nationalistic feelings they possessed. Many Frenchmen in their struggle lost their lives especially during the revolutionary wars but stood strong to defend their country against the European coalitions. This strong nationalism they exhibited was a great inspiration to so many oppressed peoples like the Greeks, Belgians, Poles, Italians, Germans among others to also fight nationalistic and attain their liberty and national Independence and unions.

However, to a lesser extent, the 1789 French revolution had negative effects which included the following.

5. The 1789 French revolution led to the outbreak of so many violent revolutions in the world. The Frenchmen felt so discontented with the nature of the Ancient regime and its exploitative ways. As a solution, they carried out a revolution which became so successful. The story of their success inspired many people to also revolt and liberate themselves. These included the Belgians and Poles, Italians, Germans, Magyars among others in 1830 and 1848, the Greeks also revolted in 1821 to 1832. Most of these revolutions were full of violence and caused instability in Europe. In 1917, the Russians also revolted against the Tsardom leading to gross instabilities including a four years civil war. Many other parts of the world took the French example to carry out violent revolutions, some workers revolutions while others peasants revolutions, for example, the Chinese Communist revolution of 1931 to 1949 led by Mao Tse Tong which was a peasant revolution and characterised a lot of bloodshed, thus the French revolution igniting global violent revolutions.

6. The French revolution also created a poor diplomatic relation between France and the rest of Europe starting from 1792 up to 1815. The revolutionary Ideologies and violence threatened many European monarchies and they decided to team up and declared war on France. This led to the outbreak of the revolutionary wars which destabilized the European continent. The revolutionary violence and events also led to the rise of over ambitious leaders to power in France especially Napoleon Bonaparte who spread warfare across Europe and many other parts of the world for example Egypt and Syria through his 1798 Egyptian Campaign. The revolutionary and Napoleonic wars destroyed European peace and stability and killed the European diplomacy not until 18th June, 1815 at water loo when sanity was restored in Europe.

In conclusion, the 1789 French revolution Impacted on the France, Europe & the world at large to a larger extent positively and to a lesser extent negatively, by ending feudalism, spreading the Ideas of enlightenment, leading to the abolition of monarchism. It also led to the spread of violence in Europe & the rest of the world, among others. These effects have been consolidated up to the present world making it a significant major turning point.

The strategies the ordinary citizens in the Moka society can adopt to take charge of their society can Include the following:

Strategies

1. They can call for the establishment of a national forum for dialogue to bring the different political groups and players together, those in opposition and the government to discuss peacefully how to find solutions to the political social and economic challenges Moka society is facing. The people of Moka can take the example of what happened in France starting from 5th may, 1789, when King Louis XVI and other political players decided to organise the Estates General meeting which had taken 175 years without sitting. It was called to find solutions to the existing economic and political challenges in France. Though the Estates General was poor handled by the King, but It was the most viable way France could be saved if it was handled properly. If this is done in Moka Community it will bring different Ideas together from different stakeholders and peacefully help the ordinary citizens in Moka society take charge of their society.

2. The Moka Elite citizens can use all possible means of sensitization and politicisation to make the ordinary people or citizens understand the need to change the existing order. Every society transformation, be it political,

Social or economic starts with mind change. The moka citizens may be suffering because they are not aware of what to do and they need enlightenment. This is similar to the situation which was in the pre-revolutionary France where most of the French peasants were stuck in middle age lack of enlightenment. It needed the Great thinkers (political philosophers) of the 18th century like Jean Jacques Rousseau, Baron de Montesquieu among others to educate them about their rights and freedom. This should be done in Moka society for instance, through social media channels, mainstream media, the press and through other clandestine channels to awaken the Moka masses and help them get together to fight for their rights and freedom.

3. The moka citizens can use the media influence to expose off some injustices like arbitrary arrests. During such moments when innocent citizens are arrested with impunity, the citizens present can use their phone cameras to capture such scenes and stream it on social media. Some regimes don't want to be exposed because it affects their International Credibility and with such pressure can mount on the government to release the victims of arrests, hence helping them to regain charge of their society.

4. The Elite groups and religious leaders of Moka community need to fraternize with the common people of Moka and raise a one voice criticizing the injustices in Moka community to put enough pressure on their government. The elite have to also dedicate themselves to serve leadership to the masses because in every fundamental transformation of a society, it is always the middle class or the elite who lead the common people. This can be seen in the case of the French revolution where middle-class men and some Nobles fraternized with the common Frenchmen to serve leadership during the French revolution of 1789. They included, men like Count Mirabeau, Desmoulin, Abbey Sieyes and royalists like Philippe Egalite of the Orleans family. Their role was so instrumental in consolidating the French revolution. With such leadership served in Moka community, the masses will be inspired to rise up and show their discontent under the guidance of visionary leadership which will enable them take charge of their society.

5. The Moka community need to subordinate any of their possible differences, or divisions that they may be having in order to have a united front and force their government accept reform. The differences can be there, based on ethnicity and cultural backgrounds, religion, sex and gender, economic status and political ideologies. Such divisions can be detrimental and can cause failure to national unity. In the revolutionary France, the French masses put aside such differences and the revolution was supported by all sections of the French people, including the middle class, peasants, urban-working classes, religious leaders, the women, who even organised a match to Versailles on 6th October 1789, among others. With such a united stand, the Moka government will yield to pressure and will accept reform and all the Moka people with will be able to take charge of their society.

6. The Moka community can also try to seek external assistance or attention from the International community to put pressure on their government to stop the injustices it does to Moka citizens. Sometimes external pressure from International human rights groups political activists, super powers and International economic funders can force regimes in some states to reform their administrations and implement democracy. The way the French assisted the Americans to have Independence by 1783 and also the Americans especially Thomas Jefferson helped the French to finalise their constitution by 1791, always external assistance is important in political activism. With such external assistance and pressure, the Moka government will be forced to reform its administration due to fear of external isolation thus the people of Moka will regain charge of their society.

7. The people of Moka community can also try violence if peaceful means fail to bring the change they want. In so many societies, where political reforms have been established, including the revolutionary France peaceful means were tried and failed and the citizens lost patience, leading to violent events resulting into fundamental changes. The Frenchmen for years demanded for reforms but the Ancient regime turned a deaf ear. They demanded for bread and their Queen told them that if bread was expensive, they should try cakes. By the calling of the Estates General meeting, (5th May 1789) all sections of Frenchmen apart from the privileged classes, were tired. It was violence that had remained as the last option. So the people of Moka can try revolutionary violence or an armed struggle if their government is not ready to yield to harmonious means because it has worked in so many countries and this will of course devastate their country, but it can be worthy the last option to enable them regain control of their society.

In conclusion, the ordinary citizens of Moka society, can adopt the above analysed strategies like public sensitization and politicisation, establishment of a national forum for dialogue and trying out violent means if peaceful means fail. These among others will help them take charge of their society.
