ADVANCED LEVEL HISTORY

HISTORY OF WORLD AFFAIRS SINCE 1789.

CONSTRUCT THREE & FOUR REVOLUTIONS AND THEIR IMPACT ON THE WORLD

ITEM 1

Global and regional politics in the Middle East show that the region has been a Centre of conflict, oil politics and competing nationalisms since 1948. This has attracted regional, continental and global intervention to bring stability, peace and development.

Between 1948 and 1978, the relationship between Palestine and Israel was tense because of the creation of the State of Israel, the displacement of Palestinians, territorial disputes, wars and competing nationalisms. These developments drew the attention of regional and global actors.

The regional and international community seeks to understand the causes of the prolonged conflict and to identify possible ways through which modern leaders can achieve a lasting solution.

Task:

a) Analyse the possible factors that led to the 1948-1978 conflict in the region.

b) Using regional, continental and global knowledge, suggest how modern leaders can find a lasting solution to the conflict mentioned above.

ITEM 2

The period from the late eighteenth century to the early nineteenth century represents a major turning point in European and world history. The French Revolution of 1789 challenged the Old Regime and introduced important political and social changes. The Napoleonic Era spread new ideas and administrative reforms across Europe, while the Restoration attempted to restore political order and stability after the defeat of Napoleon.

These developments exposed the weaknesses of absolute monarchy, feudal privilege and political exclusion, while at the same time contributing to the growth of democracy, nationalism, constitutionalism, legal reform and modern international diplomacy.

The historical developments continue to provide important lessons for the contemporary world.

Task:

(a) Analyze the need for the forces of change initiated in France by 1789.

(b) Examine the contribution of these developments to the contemporary world.

ITEM 3

The period 1914-1945 represents a complex chain of historical developments: a collapse of imperial order, militarization of European politics and the restoration of democratic and diplomatic order globally.

World War I (1914-1918) ended the imperial order. The Inter-War Years (1918-1939) witnessed the rise of Communism, Nazism and Fascism, exposing the crisis of liberalism and democracy. World War II (1939-1945) and its aftermath established the contemporary global order based on the sovereign state, human rights and multilateral institutions.

These developments have drawn continental and global attention from the African Union (AU) and the United Nations (UN).

The AU seeks to examine the social, economic and political conditions in post-WWI Europe that enabled the rise of Nazism in Germany.

The UN seeks to assess the impact of Italian Fascism on the contemporary world.

The School History Club invites you to join the debate and provide historical direction to both continental and global forums.

Task:

Provide information to:

(a) Guide the AU delegates on the topic in the scenario.

(b) Educate the UN mission on the topic identified.

ITEM 4

The Eastern Question between 1831 to 1913 referred to conflicts in the Ottoman Empire that attracted the attention of the big powers of Europe to get involved. Among them included: the Syrian crisis of 1831 to 1841 that was solved by the Straits Convention of 1841, the Crimean war of 1854- 1856 that ended in the signing of the Paris Peace treaty, the Berlin Congress of 1878 and the Balkan wars of 1908 - 1913.The above conflicts were intensified by the rivalries between Russia that claimed to be the guardian of all the Slav peoples and all Orthodox Christians in the Ottoman empire, and on the other hand Britain which was much interested in her commercial dealings where certain territories in the empire were important such as the Straits of Bosphorous and Darderelles. The aggressive nature of the big powers left the empire in the declining state. No wonder from the beginning of the 19th Century it was referred to as a "Sick Man of Europe. "Among the outcomes of conflicts in the empire included: death of people, disruption of peace among others. In modern world today super powers such as China has continued to claim that Taiwan a small state is under her control and that it is a renegade province, however Taiwan maintains that it's an independent, self-ruling democracy. This situation has therefore created tensions and conflicts between the two countries threatening to break out into war. This has therefore raised concerns among world leaders especially USA and countries in the Far East to come up with conferences to discuss the end of the conflicts.

Task.

a) Analyze the negative impact of the Eastern Question as presented in the scenario.

ITEM 5

Europe between 1789 to 1848 experienced mass revolutions that brought political changes. In i789, the French revolution broke out in France under the leadership of king louis xvi who ruled under the Bourbon Monarchy since 1774. Fie had married an Austrian princess, Marie Antonette. The revolution happened in three phases namely; the events, the reign of terror 17921794 and the Directory government 1795-1799. In 1848, Europe witnessed the outbreak of series of nationalistic revolutions that started in France and later spread to the Austrian Empire, Italian states and other Germany states. Therefore, major cities like Budapest, Paris, Vienna, Sicily, among others experience massive uprising against the existing the autocratic leaders. Only Britain and Belgium survived these revolutions. Among the causes of these uprising included; rise of nationalism, financial crisis, poor harvests among others. Chamata is African country that has experienced internal uprising by her people against the ruling government and this has contributed to loss of lives, Economic disruption and others. The African leaders have expressed the concern about the political situation in the country which may results into a major violent uprising if not solved on time. They are therefore organizing a conference to help come up with the solutions to the problem.

Task

a) Analyze the causes of the revolutions in Europe between 1789 to 1848 as seen in the scenario.

ITEM 6

Napoleon Bonaparte was born at Ajaccio, Corsica Island in the Italian State of Genoa on the 15th August 1769, one year after the state had been annexed by France. Many factors led to the rise of Napoleon to power in France but most importantly was the outbreak of the 1789 French revolution that created power vacuum after the death of important personalities such as King Louis XV, Maximillien Robspiere, Danton among others. After his rise to power in 1799, he embarked on a number of reforms both in domestic and foreign policies, among which included; Code Napoleon, education, strengthened the French military that expanded France's boundaries after defeating European powers such as Russia, Prussia by 1807, indeed by 1807 Napoleon had reached his peak, after defeating most of his neighbouring states. However, from then on wards, Napoleon's military power started declining facing several defeats such as the Peninsular wars of 1808 in which he was defeated by Spain and later in 1812, was disastrously defeated by Russia during the Moscow Campaign in which he lost over five t hundred thousand soldiers which greatly weakened him explaining his downfall by 1815.

In modern world today, Captain Ibrahim Traore the president of Burkina Faso took power in September 2022 through a military coup, overthrowing Paul Henri Damiba and quickly became one of the most loved and famous leaders in west Africa because of his reforms to the people. However, despite his achievements, he has faced several assassinations attempts from within and outside the country, the constant rebel attacks from groups such as the Islamic State. These have all threatened to overthrow his government. Some military leaders in West Africa such as the president of Mali, Niger, Guinea are concerned about the situation in Burkina Faso that is threatening into outbreak of a conflict. They have therefore organized a conference to find ways of resolving the conflicts.

TASK

a) Examine the factors that led to the downfall of Napoleon Bonaparte from Power in France as presented in the scenario.

ITEM 7

In the first half of the twentieth century, large oil deposits were discovered in different parts of the Middle East. Oil was first discovered in Iran (Persia) in 1908, followed by Iraq in 1927, Bahrain in 1932, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait in 1938, and Qatar in 1940. Before these discoveries, many countries in the region had small economies based on fishing, farming, animal keeping, and trade. However, the discovery of oil transformed the Middle East into one of the richest and most strategically important regions in the world. Oil revenues led to infrastructural development, technological advancement, growth of the education sector, urbanization, job creation, and increased Foreign. Direct Investment (FDI). Despite these achievements, oil discovery also created several challenges, including environmental degradation, regional conflicts, income inequality, foreign interference, and the rise of authoritarian governments in some countries. Recently, large oil deposits have been discovered in the Kidaka Region. Since the discover/, there has been excitement among many people who believe that oil will bring wealth, employment opportunities, better roads, improved schools, and rapid economic development, just as it did in some Middle Eastern countries. However, others fear that oil may instead lead to environmental destruction, conflicts among communities over resource ownership, corruption, unequal distribution of wealth, and political instability similar to some of the challenges experienced in the Middle East. Tension is already beginning to emerge among local communities, political leaders, and investors over how the oil resources should be managed. As a result, a national conference has been-organized to find ways of ensuring that oil becomes a blessing rather than a curse to the people of Kidaka.

Task:

a) Analyses the negative impacts of oil discovery in the Middle East as shown in the scenario.

ITEM 8

2) Between the 1920s and 1950s, China experienced major political, economic, and social changes. During this period, the Kuomintang (KMT) government under Chiang Kai-shek faced many challenges, including class divisions among people, economic hardships, a poor education system, weak healthcare services, poor governance, and repeated famine. The situation became worse due to the Japanese invasion of China and the long civil war between the KMT and the Chinese Communist Party (CCP). As public confidence in the KMT continued to fall, the CCP under Mao Zedong gained increasing support from peasants, workers, and other disadvantaged groups. These developments eventually led to the collapse of the KMT government in 1949 and the establishment of the People's Republic of China under communist leader Mao Zedong. The rise of communism under Mao greatly changed China's development path. The new government introduced reforms that transformed China into one of the major powers in the world. These reforms included the abolition of social classes such as traditional landlords, the introduction of state ownership and central planning after 1949, collectivization of agriculture, and the reshaping of China's education system by linking learning closely to national development goals. The government also promoted equal access to medical services and strengthened governance by creating a highly centralized one-party state under the control of the Chinese Communist Party.
3) Recently, the African state of Kijana Republic has experienced growing political and economic instability. The country has been governed for many years by the Union Party, whose leaders are increasingly being accused of discrimination against people, economic mismanagement, a weak education system that produces mainly job seekers, lack of medical care, weak political leadership, and repeated famine. In response, a new political movement known as the People's Transformation Front has gained popularity among workers, peasants, youth, and oath~" marginalized groups. As support for the opposition movement continues to grow, concerns have emerged that the country could experience serious political instability if people's grievances are not addressed. Consequently, the ruling party has organized a development conference to evaluate lessons that can help Kijana
4) Republic respond effectively to the needs of its citizens and avoid political collapse.

Task:

a) Analyze the factors that led to the collapse of the KMT government as presented in the scenario.

ITEM 9

Between 1948 and the late 1970s, the Middle East experienced a series of conflicts between Arabs and Israelis. The conflict originated from competing claims over Palestine, where both Arabs and Jews believed they had historical rights to the same land. In 1947, the United Nations proposed a partition plan that divided Palestine into separate Arab and Jewish states. While Jewish leaders accepted the proposal, Arab leaders rejected it, arguing that it unfairly allocated land and ignored the wishes of the Arab population. The declaration of the state of Israel in 1948 triggered the first Arab-Israeli war, which was followed by other major conflicts such as the 1956 Suez Crisis, the 1967 Six-Day War, and the 1973 Yom Kippur War. These conflicts left far-reaching impacts on the region. These include permanent displacement of Palestinians, massive loss of lives, worsening Arab-Israeli relations, economic damage, and the rise of terrorism in the region. Several attempts were made to achieve peace through signing peace agreements such as the Egypt-Israel Treaty of 1979, the Israel- Jordan Peace Treaty of 1994, the Oslo Accords of 1993-1995, and the Abraham Accords of 2020.

5) However, despite reducing tensions at different times, these agreements have not succeeded in creating permanent peace because important issues such as territorial disputes, refugee
6) resettlement, security concerns, and mutual mistrust remain unresolved.
7) Recently, the African state of Karume Republic has experienced growing tensions between two major communities, the Luwala and the Tembo. Both groups claim historical ownership of Nabuto Valley, a fertile and resource-rich region. To resolve the dispute, the government proposed a plan to divide the valley into two independent administrative zones. The Luwala accepted the proposal, believing it would promote peace and equitable access to resources. However, the Tembo rejected the plan, insisting that the entire valley belongs to them based on historical occupation. The disagreement has led to violent clashes, destruction of property, displacement of thousands of people, and the emergence of refugee camps in neighbouring countries. Several peace negotiations and mediation efforts organised by regional and international organisations have been held, but they have produced limited results. As violence continues to threaten national stability and regional security, leaders of the Karume Republic have convened a continental peace conference to identify effective strategies that can help establish lasting peace and stability among the communities of Nabuto Valley by avoiding the mistakes that undermined peace efforts in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Task:

(a) Analyse the impacts of the Arab-Israeli conflicts in the scenario.

ITEM 1:

Before colonial rule in Africa, many communities were stable and well organised. Communities were built on strong traditional foundations: the clan, age groups and community production. These systems ensured daily survival, maintained peace and order and transferred vital cultural knowledge and work ethics across generations which contributed positively to society. The clan system provided a framework for governance, dispute resolution, and social welfare, while age sets facilitated the transmission of skills, military training, and community responsibilities.

Today, many traditional foundations have either declined or been abandoned. As a result, areas of moral decay have emerged among some young people in communities. Some young people have become lazy, violent, disrespectful, use vulgar language, and drugs, which threatens community peace and development. In response, cultural leaders in some communities are advocating for strategies aimed at reviving these foundations to restore moral values among young people today. However, these efforts face challenges including modernisation, Urbanisation, and the influence of foreign cultures.

Task:
(a) Analyze the role of traditional foundations in addressing community challenges identified in the scenario.
(b) Examine the strategies that cultural leaders can use to revive the traditional foundations as a means to restore moral values among young people.

ITEM 2:

Long before European colonialism, Africa was characterized by extensive and complex trade networks that connected different regions of the continent. These included the Trans-Saharan trade routes that linked North and West Africa, the Indian Ocean trade connecting East Africa with Asia and the Middle East, and various regional trade systems that facilitated the exchange of commodities such as gold, salt, ivory, slaves, and agricultural produce. These trade systems contributed significantly to the rise of powerful states and empires, including Ghana, Mali, Songhai, and the Swahili city-states, which grew wealthy and powerful through control of these trade routes.

In contemporary Africa, intra-African trade remains disproportionately low compared to other regions, with many countries continuing to rely on export of raw materials to former colonial powers. The African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) has been established to address this challenge and promote economic integration. However, implementation has been slow due to infrastructure deficits, non-tariff barriers, and limited industrial capacity. The African Union Commission is organizing a policy dialogue on "Reviving Africa's Trade Heritage: Lessons from Pre-Colonial Trade Systems."

Task:
(a) Analyze the nature and significance of pre-colonial trade systems in Africa as reflected in the scenario.
(b) Examine the strategies that contemporary African nations can adopt to enhance intra-African trade, drawing lessons from pre-colonial experiences.

ITEM 3:

The spread of Islam across Africa from the 7th century onwards brought profound religious, social, and political transformations to the continent. Islamic revolutions and reform movements, such as the Sokoto Caliphate in West Africa (19th century) and various Jihad movements in the Sudanic belt, challenged existing political orders, established new Islamic states, and introduced new systems of governance based on Islamic law and principles. These movements often emerged as responses to perceived religious corruption, social injustice, and political oppression. They also promoted education, trade, and the spread of Islamic culture across the continent.

In many parts of Africa today, Islamic movements continue to play a significant role in political and social life, with some advocating for the implementation of Sharia law and others engaging in violent extremism. The African Union, in partnership with regional organizations, has organized a symposium on "Islamic Reform Movements in Africa: Historical Context and Contemporary Implications." You have been invited as a historical expert to prepare a background paper for the symposium.

Task:
(a) Analyse the factors that led to the emergence of Islamic reform movements in pre-colonial Africa as described in the scenario.
(b) Examine the relevance of lessons from these historical movements in addressing contemporary challenges of religious extremism and governance in Africa.

ITEM 4:

Following the attainment of independence in the 1960s, East African nations embarked on various socio-economic transformation programmes aimed at addressing the legacy of colonial underdevelopment. These included the establishment of trade unions and cooperative movements to protect workers' rights and promote collective economic empowerment. Trade unions played a significant role in advocating for better working conditions and fair wages, while cooperative societies enabled small-scale farmers and traders to pool resources and access markets more effectively. These movements contributed to improved living standards and economic participation for many East Africans.

Today, trade unions and cooperative movements in East Africa face numerous challenges including declining membership, limited resources, and changing economic structures. The East African Community has organized a high-level economic development forum in Arusha under the theme: "Revitalizing Trade Unions and Cooperative Movements for East African Development." You have been appointed as the lead historical researcher to prepare the background discussion document for the forum.

Task:
(a) Examine the role of trade unions and cooperative movements in post-independence socio-economic development in East Africa.
(b) Recommend practical measures that East African governments can adopt to revitalize these movements for contemporary development.

ITEM 5:

The establishment of regional economic groupings has been a key strategy for promoting economic integration and development in Africa. The Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA), the Southern African Development Community (SADC), and the Arab Maghreb Union (AMU) were established to enhance trade, promote economic cooperation, and strengthen the bargaining power of member states in international relations. These groupings have made significant progress in reducing trade barriers and promoting regional infrastructure development. They have also provided platforms for member states to coordinate positions on international issues.

However, these regional groupings continue to face challenges including overlapping memberships, limited implementation of agreements, political instability in member states, and competition from global economic powers. The African Union Commission has organized a continental conference on "Strengthening Regional Economic Communities for African Integration," and you have been invited as a historical expert to prepare the principal discussion document.

Task:
(a) Analyse the objectives and achievements of regional economic groupings such as COMESA, SADC, and AMU as identified in the scenario.
(b) Examine the challenges limiting their effectiveness and recommend strategies for strengthening regional economic integration in Africa.

ITEM 6:

The colonial powers in East Africa introduced formal education system specifically designed to produce low-level clerks, interpreters, artisans, and teachers to serve colonial interests. This system prioritised vocational training over intellectual empowerment and undermined critical thinking about the exploitative nature of colonial rule. Since independence in 1962, the Ugandan government has implemented a series of transformative educational reforms designed to overhaul the colonial education system. These reforms include the integration of vocational studies, localization of language instruction in early years of primary, and most recently, the rollout of the Lower Secondary Competence Based Curriculum. All these curriculum reforms aim to align education with Uganda's national development goals.

However, some critics across the country consider these reforms as a "trial-and-error experiment" and a financial burden on parents. In response, education stakeholders including the Local Council leaders, school administrators and Ministry of education officials have organised sensitization programmes to bridge this gap and demonstrate how modern education corrects the shortcomings of the colonial past.

Task:
(a) Analyse ways in which the colonial education system created long-term socio-economic challenges on East Africa to date.

(b) Evaluate the post-independence educational reforms identified in the scenario in transforming education into an instrument for national socio-economic development.

ITEM 7:

Despite decades of independence and numerous development initiatives, African countries continue to face persistent challenges that undermine growth and development. These include high levels of unemployment, particularly among the youth, endemic corruption that diverts public resources and undermines governance, and mounting public debt that constrains fiscal space for development spending. These challenges are often compounded by weak institutions, inadequate infrastructure, and limited industrialization. Unemployment has led to social unrest and brain drain, corruption has eroded public trust in governments, and debt has compromised sovereignty and development.

The African Union Commission has expressed deep concern about these challenges and their potential to generate social unrest and political instability. In response, the Commission has organized a continental conference on "Tackling Africa's Developmental Challenges: A Historical and Contemporary Perspective," and you have been invited as a policy expert to present a paper.

Task:
(a) Analyse the causes and consequences of key challenges such as unemployment, corruption, and debt on Africa's development as reflected in the scenario.
(b) Recommend practical strategies that African governments can adopt to address these challenges and promote sustainable development.

ITEM 9:

Following the Berlin Conference, European powers moved to establish effective control over their claimed territories in Africa. This involved military conquest, political manipulation, economic exploitation, and cultural imposition. Africans resisted colonial rule through various means, including armed resistance, diplomatic negotiation, and religious movements, but were eventually subdued by superior European military technology and the collaboration of some African elites. The establishment of colonial rule fundamentally transformed African societies, economies, and political systems, disrupting traditional governance structures and introducing exploitative economic systems.

In contemporary Africa, many of the structures and systems established during colonial rule continue to influence governance and development. Some African leaders have advocated for a comprehensive decolonization of governance systems and institutions to ensure they reflect African realities and values. The African Leadership Institute has organized a conference on "Decolonizing African Governance."

Task:
(a) Examine the methods used by European powers to establish colonial rule in Africa and the nature of African resistance.
(b) Evaluate the lessons that contemporary African governments can draw from the experience of colonial rule in building effective and legitimate governance systems.

ITEM 10:

Different colonial masters administered their colonies differently. Britain used indirect rule in Uganda and Nigeria, governing through existing African chiefs and structures. France applied assimilation policy in Ivory Coast, seeking to integrate Africans into French culture and institutions. Germany used direct rule in Tanzania, governing through appointed European officials and suppressing African autonomy. All these administrative systems created some dependence of the Africans on their colonial masters until their independence. Despite attainment of independence, Africans continued depending on their former colonial masters as opposed to the original dreams of the first African presidents.

When the Organisation of African Union (OAU) was formed, it advocated for self-rule, shared economic development among African countries and elimination of foreign influence. However, member states still experience internal financial weaknesses, political disunity, effects of modern neo-colonialism, and a heavy foreign debt burden. The OAU's successor, the African Union, continues to grapple with these persistent challenges.

Task:

(a) Analyse ways in which the colonial administrative systems identified in the scenario created dependence in Africa today.
(b) Evaluate strategies that the Organisation of African Union (OAU) should adopt to address the challenges in the scenario.

ITEM 11:

Sierra Leone and Liberia were established as settlements for freed slaves from the Americas and Europe in the 19th century. Sierra Leone was founded by the British as a colony for freed slaves from the British Empire, while Liberia was established by the American Colonization Society as a settlement for freed African-American slaves. Both nations developed unique political and social systems influenced by their origins, with Americo-Liberian and Creole elites dominating political life for much of their history. These settler communities often maintained distinct identities from the indigenous populations, creating social and political tensions.

Today, both Sierra Leone and Liberia continue to grapple with the legacies of their founding, including ethnic divisions, political instability, and economic challenges. The African Union has organized a symposium on "Historical Foundations of African States: Lessons from Sierra Leone and Liberia," and you have been invited as a historical expert to prepare the principal discussion document.

Task:
(a) Analyse the factors that led to the creation of Sierra Leone and Liberia and the nature of their early political systems.
(b) Evaluate the relevance of their experiences to contemporary African efforts in state-building and national unity.

ITEM 12:

The United States and Canada emerged from the colonial experiences of European powers in North America. The United States achieved independence from Britain through the American Revolution (1775-1783) and established a federal republic based on principles of democracy and constitutional governance. Canada achieved self-governance through a more gradual process of peaceful evolution, culminating in Confederation in 1867. Both nations developed distinct political systems and economic trajectories while maintaining close ties with their former colonial power. The two nations have become major economic and political powers in the modern world.

In contemporary Africa, the experiences of the United States and Canada offer important lessons for nation-building, democratic consolidation, and economic development. The African Union Commission has organized a symposium on "Lessons from the Americas for African State-Building," and you have been invited as a historical consultant to prepare the discussion paper.

Task:
(a) Analyse the factors that led to the emergence of the United States and Canada as distinct nations.
(b) Examine the relevance of their experiences to contemporary African efforts in state-building and democratic governance.

ITEM 13:

The nineteenth century witnessed the unification of Italy and Germany through processes of nationalism, diplomacy, and warfare. Italy achieved unification under the leadership of Piedmont-Sardinia and figures such as Cavour and Garibaldi, culminating in the proclamation of the Kingdom of Italy in 1861. Germany achieved unification under the leadership of Prussia and its Chancellor Otto von Bismarck, through a series of calculated wars that culminated in the proclamation of the German Empire in 1871. Both unifications fundamentally altered the balance of power in Europe and inspired nationalist movements worldwide.

In contemporary Africa, efforts at regional integration and unification face similar challenges of competing national interests, historical rivalries, and external interference. The African Union has organized a high-level policy dialogue on "Building a United Africa: Historical Lessons and Contemporary Strategies," and you have been invited as a historian to prepare a discussion document.

Task:
(a) Examine the methods and strategies used to unify Italy and Germany in the19th century.
(b) Evaluate the applicability of these strategies to contemporary African efforts at continental integration.

ITEM 14:

The Pan-African Movement emerged in the late 19th and early 20th centuries as a response to the enslavement, colonization, and oppression of Africans. It called for the unity and solidarity of all people of African descent, the liberation of Africa from colonial rule, and the establishment of a united African continent. Key figures such as W.E.B. Du Bois, Marcus Garvey, Kwame Nkrumah, and Jomo Kenyatta championed the cause, and the movement culminated in the formation of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) in 1963. The movement played a crucial role in inspiring nationalist struggles and achieving independence across the continent.

Today, despite the establishment of the African Union as a successor to the OAU, the continent remains fragmented, and the dream of a united Africa remains unrealized. The African Union is commemorating the 60th anniversary of the OAU by organizing a continental conference on "The Pan-African Dream: Past, Present, and Future." You have been appointed as a historical expert to present the principal discussion document.

Task:
(a) Analyse the factors that contributed to the growth of the Pan-African Movement and its achievements.
(b) Examine the challenges that have hindered the realization of the Pan-African vision and recommend strategies for overcoming them.

ITEM 15:

African nationalism emerged as a powerful political force in the mid-20th century, driven by a shared desire to end colonial rule and achieve independence. The movement was inspired by various factors, including the experience of African soldiers in World War II, the influence of Pan-Africanism, the Atlantic Charter, the emergence of nationalist leaders, and the exploitation of African resources. Nationalist movements employed various strategies, including peaceful protests, political negotiations, and armed struggle, to achieve independence. The movement was characterized by mass mobilization, the formation of political parties, and the articulation of demands for self-determination.

Following independence, African nationalist leaders faced the challenge of nation-building in artificial colonial states characterized by ethnic diversity and weak institutions. The African Leadership Institute is organizing a conference on "Nationalism and Nation-Building in Africa," and you have been invited as a historical consultant to prepare the background paper.

Task:
(a) Analyse the factors that contributed to the growth of African nationalism and the strategies used to achieve independence.
(b) Evaluate the successes and challenges of post-independence nation-building efforts in Africa.

ITEM 16:

Since independence, many African states have faced challenges of separatism and ethnic nationalism, where various groups have demanded greater autonomy or outright secession from existing states. These movements have often been fueled by perceived marginalization, unequal distribution of resources, historical grievances, and the legacy of artificial colonial boundaries. Examples include the Biafran secession in Nigeria, the Katanga secession in the Democratic Republic of Congo, and ongoing conflicts in various parts of the continent. These movements have often led to violent conflicts, humanitarian crises, and regional instability.

The African Union has prioritized conflict prevention and resolution as a key pillar of its agenda, promoting dialogue and inclusive governance as means to address grievances. The African Union Commission has organized a high-level policy dialogue on "Managing Separatism and Ethnic Nationalism in Africa," and you have been invited as a historical expert to prepare the principal discussion document.

Task:
(a) Analyse the factors that have contributed to separatist and ethnic nationalist movements in Africa.
(b) Examine the strategies that African governments can adopt to address the challenges of separatism and ethnic nationalism.

ITEM 17:

The drafting of independence constitutions was a great step in defining national identity and governance structures in Uganda and Kenya during the post-independence era. Parliaments in both nations were intended to be the "voice of the people". Later, the media emerged as a key platform through which citizens engaged in political affairs thus bridging the gap between the government and the governed. Over time, however, these institutions often struggled against executive interference and corruption.

In Uganda, recent public concerns show that Parliament has had problems with transparency, weak institutional policies, and does not adequately represent citizens' views. In one of the districts, the Auditor General's report shows a shortage of teachers and textbooks in government schools. Community members also complain of missing drugs and other medical supplies in health centres. These service delivery gaps have prompted Civil Society Organizations (CSO) and Non-Governmental Organisations (NGOs) to advocate for access to budget allocation data from education and health officers so that they can track if funds are actually reaching schools and health facilities.

Task:
(a) Examine ways through which Parliament and the media can ensure that the advocacy by NGOs and CSOs succeeds.
(b) Evaluate strategies that the Parliament of Uganda should adopt to address the problems it is facing.

TEM 18:

South Africa's history has been characterized by struggles for economic resources, particularly gold and diamonds, which attracted foreign interests and shaped its political development. The discovery of these minerals in the late 19th century intensified British imperial ambitions, leading to the Anglo-Boer Wars and the eventual unification of South Africa in 1910. The mineral revolution also entrenched racial segregation and laid the foundation for the apartheid system. Throughout the 20th century, various groups resisted these systems, culminating in the establishment of majority rule in 1994.

In contemporary Africa, struggles over natural resources continue to fuel conflict and instability, with foreign powers often competing for access to these resources. The African Union has organized a high-level policy dialogue on "Managing Natural Resources for Peace and Development," and you have been invited as a historical expert to prepare the principal discussion document.

Task:
(a) Analyse the role of economic resources in shaping South Africa's political development and unification.
(b) Examine the lessons that contemporary African states can draw from South Africa's experience in managing resource-related conflicts.

ITEM 19:

The Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) was founded in 1961 in Belgrade, emerging from the Bandung Conference of 1955. It brought together states that chose not to formally align with either the United States or the Soviet Union during the Cold War. Its founding principles included respect for national sovereignty, non-interference in internal affairs, peaceful coexistence, and opposition to colonialism and imperialism. Leaders like Jawaharlal Nehru, Gamal Abdel Nasser, and Josip Broz Tito championed the movement, which provided a platform for developing nations to voice their concerns on the global stage.

In today's multipolar world, where great power competition is resurging, the relevance and principles of NAM are being revisited. Many African nations are seeking to diversify their international partnerships and avoid being drawn into new rivalries. The African Union has organized a forum to discuss the future of non-alignment and African agency. You have been appointed as a historical expert to prepare the forum's background paper.

Task:
(a) Analyse the factors that led to the formation of the Non-Aligned Movement and its principles.
(b) Assess the relevance of NAM's principles for contemporary African states in navigating global geopolitical tensions and safeguarding their national interests.

Item 20

For many centuries before the coming of colonial rule, African societies developed well- organized social and economic systems that promoted unity, production, security and social responsibility. Communities practised communal land ownership, division of labour, trade, apprenticeship, age-set systems, clan organization and mutual support mechanisms that ensured the welfare of members. Leadership institutions regulated social conduct, settled disputes and mobilised communities for development activities. These systems enabled societies to sustain themselves economically and socially while preserving their cultural values. Today, many communities are experiencing youth unemployment, land conflicts, environmental degradation, declining moral values, increasing individualism and weak participation in community development programmes. In one district, the Local Council, cultural leaders and Community Development Officers have expressed concern that many young people no longer appreciate the indigenous values that once promoted cooperation, accountability and self-reliance. Consequently, they have organised a community dialogue to explore how selected pre-colonial African social and economic systems can be adapted to address these contemporary challenges and promote sustainable community development.

Task

(a) Analyse the structure and characteristics of pre-colonial African social and economic systems and explain how they promoted social cohesion, economic productivity and sustainable community life in African societies.

(b) Evaluate the relevance of selected pre-colonial African social and economic systems in addressing the community challenges identified in the scenario.

Item 21:

For many centuries before the coming of colonial rule, the clan institution was one of the most important social and political institutions in African societies. It gave members a sense of identity, belonging and shared heritage. Clan leaders regulated social behaviour, settled disputes, allocated land, organized economic activities, preserved cultural practices and ensured the welfare of community members. Through clan leadership, communities promoted unity, transmitted values from one generation to another and maintained peace and social order. Today, many communities are experiencing declining cultural values, increasing family conflicts, youth moral degeneration, land disputes, weak community participation in development programmes and a growing disconnect between generations. In one district, cultural leaders, religious leaders and Local Council officials have observed that the weakening of the clan institution has contributed to these challenges. They have organized a cultural dialogue to examine how positive values and practices of the clan institution can complement modern governance and strengthen community development.

Task

(a) Analyse the importance of the clan institution in pre-colonial African societies as the foundation of shared values, cultural heritage and governance.

(b) Evaluate the relevance of selected values and practices of the clan institution in addressing the community challenges identified in the scenario.

Item 22

Before colonial rule, African Traditional Religion (ATR) was an integral part of life in many African societies. It shaped people's beliefs, values and social relationships through respect for God, ancestors, spirits and the natural environment. Religious leaders guided communities in matters of morality, conflict resolution, environmental conservation and social justice. Through rituals, taboos, sacrifices, festivals and moral teachings, African Traditional Religion promoted honesty, respect for life, hard work, communal responsibility and peaceful coexistence while preserving indigenous knowledge and cultural heritage.

Today, many communities are experiencing increasing cases of corruption, drug abuse, domestic violence, environmental degradation, declining moral values and weakening respect for cultural heritage. In one municipality, the District Cultural and Heritage Committee, together with religious leaders and education officials, has expressed concern that many young people are abandoning positive indigenous values that once promoted responsible citizenship. They have organized a community dialogue to explore how the positive teachings and practices of African Traditional Religion can complement modern efforts to promote responsible behaviour without undermining constitutional rights and freedom of worship.

Task

(a) Analyse the role of African Traditional Religion in preserving societal knowledge and values in pre-colonial African societies.

(b) Evaluate the lessons that contemporary communities can learn from African Traditional Religion in addressing the community challenges identified in the scenario.
