Item 1
Different countries across the world have adopted varying approaches to assess their levels of progress. For instance, some developed countries emphasize the direct benefit of individuals in a country from various sectors.
In contrast, many developing countries, including Uganda, continue to face challenges where economic growth does not always translate into improved living conditions for the population.
This has created a discussion among policymakers and development planners about the most appropriate ways of determining whether a country is truly progressing or not.
You have been identified by the budget frame-makers of Uganda to contribute to this ongoing discussion so that it would guide them on how to allocate to each sector of the economy in the next financial year of 2026/2027 consistently.

Task
In an essay write-up, prepare a presentation for the discussion.

Item 2
Agriculture remains a dominant economic activity in many developing countries, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa. In countries such as Uganda, a large proportion of the population about 65% depends on farming for livelihood, yet the sector is often characterized by low productivity and limited modernization. Meanwhile, some countries that have achieved rapid economic growth have diversified their economies by investing in industry and services alongside agriculture.
This has led to ongoing debate about the role agriculture should play in transforming economies like that of Uganda into modern and fast-growing ones. You are expected to provide your considered view on this matter so that it would help Ugandans to sustain economic progress rapidly in the sector.

Task
Write an argument to the Ministry of Agriculture Uganda to guide the decision-makers.
