Before colonial rule, Buganda Kingdom was a well-organized society built on the clan (Ekika) system. Every Muganda belonged to a clan with a clan head (Owakasolya), clan totems, and ancestral land (obutaka). The clan ensured social security, disciplined members, distributed land, and preserved cultural values. It was the foundation for political mobilization and social support.

Today, in many Buganda communities, the clan system has declined. Youths no longer know their clan totems, clan heads have no authority, and butaka land has been sold off. This has led to land conflicts, identity crisis, and moral decay. In response, the Buganda Kingdom is organizing clan sensitization drives to revive the system.

Task:
(a) Analyse ways in which the clan system was the foundation of the Buganda society before 1900.
(b) Examine strategies cultural leaders can use to revive the clan system to address current community challenge
*Item 2

After the Second World War in 1945, African soldiers who returned home, educated elites, and the 1945 Manchester Pan-African Congress inspired Africans to demand independence. In Uganda, political parties like UNC and later UPC mobilized people against colonial rule, using newspapers, strikes and boycotts.

Today, your school is celebrating Independence Day, but some students say independence was a gift from colonialists and Africans did little. You have been chosen as a history student to sensitize them.

Task:
(a) Analyse factors that led to the rise and growth of African nationalism between 1945 and 1960.
(b) Evaluate the methods used by African nationalists to achieve independence.

Item 3 Topic: Separatism - Katanga, Biafra & Buganda Crisis 1966

At independence, many new African states faced separatist movements. In Congo, Katanga Province under Moise Tshombe tried to secede in 1960-63 with Belgian support. In Nigeria, Biafra under Ojukwu tried to secede in 1967-70 causing civil war. In Uganda, Buganda demanded federal status leading to the 1966 crisis. All these threatened national unity.

Recently, a pressure group in one region of Uganda is demanding secession, claiming marginalization and different culture. The government has formed a dialogue committee where you are a youth representative and historian.

Task:
(a) Analyse reasons why separatist movements emerged in new African states after independence.
(b) Examine how new African leaders handled separatism and what Uganda can learn.

*Item4-

After independence, African leaders realized small economies could not develop alone. They formed regional economic groupings. The first East African Community (1967-1977) collapsed due to ideological differences between Nyerere, Obote and Kenyatta, unequal benefits, and personal rivalries. The Organisation of African Unity (OAU) formed in 1963 advocated unity but was affected by neo-colonialism and financial weakness.

Today, the revived EAC, COMESA, and AU face similar challenges: member states not implementing protocols, trade barriers, and heavy foreign debt. Your school debate club is discussing if regional groupings have failed.

Task:
(a) Analyse ways in which challenges identified in the scenario caused failure of early regional groupings.
(b) Evaluate strategies the African Union and EAC should adopt to address the challenges in the scenario.

*Item 5-

After independence ,African countries adopted developmental programs for example Ujaama in Tanzania,Harambe in Kenya and CMC in Uganda,all these were aiming at curbing post socio economic challenges among member states.

Today, in your district, there is high inequality, youth unemployment, and selfishness. Local leaders are proposing communal farming and cooperatives similar to Ujamaa to fight poverty. You are invited as a resource person.

Task:
(a) Analyse reasons why African countries introduced these policies.
(b) Evaluate their legacy on Africa today.
item 6
Since 19th Century, Asians (Indians) came to East Africa as traders and later as labourers for Uganda Railway. They became shopkeepers, money lenders and controlled trade. Africans resented them for economic exploitation, racial segregation, and not mixing with Africans. This led to Amin's expulsion of Asians in 1972.

Today, Asian investors have returned and control many factories and supermarkets in Kampala. Some Ugandans complain history is repeating itself with high prices and low wages for Africans. A civil society organization has organized a public dialogue.

Task:
(a) Analyse the role played by Asians in the economic development of East Africa before 1972.
(b) Evaluate how Africans reacted to Asian economic domination and lessons for today.

*Item 7 -

At independence, education in East Africa was racial and sectarian: European schools for whites, Asian schools for Asians, African schools with poor quality. After independence, Uganda and Tanzania nationalized education in late 1960s/early 1970s to create one national system, abolish racial schools, and make curriculum relevant to national needs.

In your district, private schools have emerged that are expensive and offer foreign curricula, while UPE schools lack teachers. Some people say education is again becoming unequal. Ministry of Education officials have organized a community meeting about nationalized education after independence.
a)Evaluate the impact of nationalisation of education on national unity and socio-economic development .

b)Examine its demerits on pre existing Africa.
