I Need You to Hear

My parents are over protective. It honestly frustrates me when I am never allowed to go anywhere with my friends or go to places without my parents. They dictate the clothes I wear, the food I eat, where I go and the people I hang out with. They also determine what time I should go to bed. 2

I have tried to be more understanding and obedient but my parents still treat me like a child. If only they could understand that I am no longer a kid, I have my own opinions, thoughts and preferences.

Last month I requested my parents to allow me attend my best friend's birth-day party. I was surprised that they allowed me to go out but I had to be home by 10:00pm. I was enjoying my time at the party and I did not even notice the time and it was 1:00am. I looked at my phone; I had missed my parent's calls twenty-five times.

I was grounded for two weeks and my mum confiscated my phone because I didn't answer her phone calls. I did not get angry or disappointed because it was actually my fault. If I had taken note of the time, I wouldn't have gotten punished. I still love my parents. I know they love me and want the best for me.

My mum used to tell me in the old-days parents were stricter than today. Their parents would never let them go out without any companion. They had to do their chores every day before they could go out, and their parents also picked their suitors for them. I have always fond this unbelievable because getting married to a person you don't love is totally unfair. I cannot imagine myself in such a situation. There was a time that I had to go to my group discussion, but my mother wouldn't let me go without any companion. So, I had to go with my cousin to ensure that I went there and did not go to some other place. I men I am old enough to go there alone without any companion. I just want to do my own thing and just be me. I want to be independent, and my parents just don't get it.

My parents are being strict because they are afraid of losing me. As I am their only child it's their responsibility to protect me. Well, to solve this problem I will probably talk to my parents about them being strict and explain to them how I feel about them being strict. I will also prove to them that I can be a good daughter. I will gain their trust so that they will not need to be strict as before. I just want to live my life without all these restrictions. 3

Task: Using 90 words, present the ways how this child is being mistreated according to the extract.

My Uganda, My Pride

The number of Ugandans leaving the country to look for "greener pastures" is alarming. They pursue jobs that pay more than one million shillings per month. When asked why they choose to do this, many explain their choice by saying that there are few or no well-paying jobs for the uneducated or half-educated in Uganda. Alas! Are they not right? It is true that Uganda's economy is structured in a way that leaves little space for the development of the uneducated or half-educated. However, how do we explain the action of a qualified teacher who forsakes his/her teaching job in Uganda for a "well-paying one" in another country? 5

One word explains it, "patriotism". Without patronizing individuals who have made the choice, we can all agree that the working conditions in the "promised lands" are not always the best. Whereas we have had many succeed in foreign countries, we have also heard many stories of Ugandan citizens who have died while pursuing the "favourable jobs". Some have made it out, barely escaping death, and lived to see another day, while others have lost their lives. One would then ask what stand Uganda as a nation takes in all this. How can it let its people suffer at the hands of foreigners?

Well, here is why; there is little or nothing at all that a country can do for her citizens who very willingly flee to another country. There are boundaries, immigration rules and regulations to be adhered to. All these are constraints as to how much a country can do for her citizens caught up in political quagmire in another country. As much as a country should do all it takes to protect her citizens, the citizens too should do all it takes to ensure their security. This starts with citizens doing what is right. How can they do this?

Citizens ought to take full responsibility for their actions and not to blame anybody else. They should expect consequences and be ready to face any penalties that accrue from the law. This includes deportation at the peak of a crisis. Government cannot trespass in a bid to rescue anyone without lengthy official negotiations with the country of interest. At worst, one could get oneself incarcerated for some time. Nothing should be taken for granted. The example of Ugandans leaving the country in search for jobs is just one case in point of whether or not an individual demonstrates patriotism. That aside, there are very many other ways that patriotism can be demonstrated and you will see them if you look close enough.
