SECTION A: COMPULSORY

Item 1

In a government secondary school in Uganda, teachers have observed that many students are no longer interested in reading books. Even when textbooks are available, students prefer to spend time on their phones or chatting with friends. As a result, their performance in class is affected. The school has organized a parent–teacher meeting to discuss this issue. Parents who will attend have different levels of education. Some believe children are just lazy, while others think schools should do more. Some parents are more comfortable listening in local languages than in English. The school wants a student representative to share ideas during the meeting on improving reading culture among learners. The message should consider both home and school responsibilities.

Task*:

Prepare a presentation for the meeting between 300-400 words based on the situation above.

SECTION B

(Choose one item from this section)

Item 2

A tree-planting programme was recently introduced to improve environmental sustainability and reduce the effects of climate change in your area. Despite initial enthusiasm, participation levels have varied across different parts of the community. Organizers would like to understand the factors influencing involvement and identify ways to encourage greater participation. Before expanding the programme, they need evidence that can help improve planning and implementation. Students have been invited to contribute ideas through research. You have been chosen to develop a study that investigates the issue and supports future action.

Task

As a student of General paper, write a research proposal between 500-700 words to help address the issue in the scenario.

Item 3

In a government secondary school in eastern Uganda, there have been growing concerns about declining teacher motivation. Some teachers arrive late, miss lessons, or appear less enthusiastic during teaching. Students have noticed this and feel it affects their learning and performance. When asked, teachers mention several challenges, including low salaries, heavy workloads, limited teaching materials, and a lack of professional support.

The school administration is interested in understanding how these factors influence teacher motivation and how this, in turn, affects student outcomes. Students have been asked to design a research study that explores this issue from different angles to suggest possible improvements.

Task:

Develop a research proposal between 500-700 words based on the situation described in the scenario above.
