SECTION A

ITEM 1

During a field visit to a cultural heritage site in Northern Uganda, a team of social researchers learns about the organization of pre- colonial African societies through oral history. Elders explained that communities relied on clans, councils of elders and age set systems to manage social life, distribute land and organize communal work. Agriculture, craftsmanship and local trade were essential for survival, prosperity and social harmony. While during these findings, some researchers argue that Africans should carefully study how pre- colonial societies survived economically and that riving or adapting these practices could help solve today's socio-economic problems and promote progress from lower middle income to upper middle-income status. Others, however feel that modern African societies have moved beyond this traditional system, making such studies unnecessary.

Task:

Examine the pre-colonial African ways of life and give recommendations on how modern African societies can emulate and improve them in order to achieve higher economic growth rates.

ITEM 2

During the colonial period, education in Uganda mainly aimed at producing clerks, interpreters and low-level workers to serve the colonial administration. This created challenges such as limited access to education, unequal opportunities and a curriculum that did not fully address African needs. After independence, Uganda introduced reforms through curriculum changes, education policies, expansion of schools and development of tertiary institutions to improve skills, promote national development and support modernisation. These reforms aimed at preparing citizens to contribute to social and economic transformation. Despite these efforts, many African countries continue to face challenges that affect growth and development. Problems such as heavy debt burdens, corruption, unemployment, low industrial growth and poor use of resources have slowed economic progress in many countries. Unemployment has become a major challenge because many young people remain without stable sources of income despite completing school and training.

In many parts of Africa today, many young people spend long periods without employment opportunities, leading to increased poverty, dependency and involvement in risky activities. Cultural leaders are concerned that if unemployment continues increasing, it may affect social and economic development in the area. Your school has been asked to suggest practical solutions that can help address this challenge.

Task

Analyse the causes of unemployment in Africa and suggest strategies that can be used to address the challenges in the scenario.

SECTION B

Item 3

By the 19th century, Europe's industrial revolution created a urgent need and insatiable demand for raw materials, new markets and desire to own strategic territories in the name of scramble for and Partition of Africa. Africa became a centre of European rivalry especially Britain, France, Germany, Portugal among others.

The arrival of the European Powers led to conflicts which consequently made the calling of the Berlin conference of 1884-85 inevitable and it gave legal occupation of African territories.

The colonialists were aided by explorers like H.M Stanley, Dr. David Livingstone and Rebman who exposed the rich resources of Africa and drew maps to guide the colonial process. This made Africans to be largely affected. The effects of scramble and partition of Africa generated discontent which sparked off the rise of African nationalism in order for the Africans to reclaim the sovereignty and the lost independence. In Gold Coast, Kwame Nkrumah formed the Convention Peoples Party (C.P.P) in 1949, Algerians formed National Liberation Front (FLN) in 1954 in order to dislodge the colonial influence and make African continent free.

In Banga community, the local people are facing challenges of foreigners who have grabbed land, displaced people and there is untold oppression. These problems have made natives to be unsettled and have petitioned the local authorities to intervene and get a lasting solution.

Task.

Examine the impact of the scramble and partition of Africa and suggest ways how the Banga community can address their challenges drawing examples from African nationalists.

ITEM 4

Pan-Africanism emerged from efforts by intellectuals, activists and political leaders who promoted African unity, equality and freedom. Conferences, political organizations and influential leaders encouraged cooperation among Africans and people of African origin across the world. These ideas later contributed to independence struggles and inspired movements against colonial rule. African nationalism developed in different forms as people demanded self-government, political representation and economic freedom. Nationalist movements used protests, political organizations, strikes and negotiations despite facing despotism and internal divisions. Both Pan-Africanism and nationalism encouraged cooperation and collective action against systems viewed as unjust.

In Samba district, several community development projects such as youth skills programmes, road maintenance, environmental conservation and agricultural cooperatives have faced challenges because people increasingly identify more with clan, ethnic and regional groups than with shared district goals. Competition for resources, limited cooperation among associations and disagreements between communities have slowed development efforts and weakened collective action. This has aroused the attention of leaders and youth groups and intends to seek lessons from historical experiences that promoted cooperation among diverse groups for common objectives.

Task

Analyse the factors for the growth of African nationalism and evaluate how they can help Samba district overcome their challenges.
